Southern Girls -A Saratoga correspondent of the New York Star says:

A good many of the Southern people have come back. You know how much they added to the spirit and character of the place in the old times. There are two ex-Confederate Generals here, and I believe five or six Southern states men. And above all, there are two or three Southern belles. Don't you wish that I may tell you their names? You be hanged. Look here, if you come to Saratoga, stand on the Grand Lookout at 10 a, m. If you don't know where the Grand Lookout is, ask Charley Leland, of the Clarendon. I don't ask you to stand there long, but just long enough to see a young woman, in the simplest riding habit in the world, get upon a magnificent bay. She is a brunette, and not over 25, but she came up from the orange groves, and she brought with her that indescribable something—that mixture of fire and force which contrasts so delightfully with the sweetness and light of the innumerable Lady Hamiltons of the North, who are languishing here in landaus and phaetons. I believe we atfected to turn up our democratic noses at one time at the hauteur and inbread imperialness of some of these hot-blooded women who were sa'd to have stripped themselves of their jewels for Jeff Davis' treasury, and were ready at a moment's notice to become Godivas for the same cause. But we take back all we said when we see one of them on horseback. We turn down our noses on the Grand Leokout, and are ready to pay them all kinds of homsgs. "Your Long Island fox hunters," remarked Col. Pike Graham, "ought to invite a few of those South ern women up to show you how to manage your
